

Seeds of Change: Public History and Sustainability

*Friday, March 21, 2014
Exhibit Hall*

Plants

History

Trash

Buildings

Memory

Be sure to stop by “Seeds of Change: Public History and Sustainability” pop-up exhibit on Friday in the Exhibit Hall. Through participants’ contributions, we hope to promote deeper understanding and foster new conversations about sustainability and our work as public historians.

We need your help! Here’s how you can contribute:

1.) Think about your own experiences or site/organization

- What sustainable initiatives and practices are happening where you work?
- Do you have ideas about sustainable practices at public history sites? Or how historians can engage the topic of sustainability in their work?

2.) Take a photo or draw a sketch of your sustainable practice

- Please make sure to print the image prior to arriving at the pop-up exhibit. We will not have access to a printer on site.

3.) Write a label for your image

- Decide which category—plants, history, trash, buildings, or memory—best fits your image.
- In 50 words, write a brief description of your image on the appropriate template.
- Please also include a question, challenge, or vision for the future on your label to spark conversation and engage participants at the exhibit!

4.) Swing by the Pop-Up Museum on Friday, March 21 in the Exhibit Hall and contribute to NCPH’s first pop-up exhibit!

- There are prizes available in each category—plants, history, trash, buildings, and memory—so be sure to stop by the exhibit with your image and label!